

Choose risk and be rewarded.

Join CIBC's Risk Management Development Program.

Program Description

The Risk Management Development Program (RMDP) is a rotation program designed to build your foundational knowledge of Risk Management while developing your business knowledge and technical skills.

If you:

- Have a passion for Risk Management
- Are in your final year of a business administration or related program
- Enjoy applying your analytical, creative problem solving and interpersonal skills

The RMDP offers you:

- Access and exposure to industry experts
- Challenging assignments that allow you to apply Risk Management concepts and principles to business situations
- The opportunity to work with other professionals in our national office (in Toronto) with the potential for global exposure

Program Details

The RMDP is a two-year program offering four six-month rotations that focus on the following objectives:

- Building your capability as a Risk Management professional
- Enhancing your technical abilities through various Risk Management projects, strategies and ongoing business activities
- Developing your knowledge of our products, services and operations and their impact on the success of our business
- Establishing your professional network within Risk Management and across CIBC

As an analyst, your rotations can include various areas within the Risk Management line of business including market, credit and operational risk. There is also the opportunity for you to complete a rotation within an additional CIBC business unit to understand the impact of Risk Management on other CIBC businesses.

As part of the program, you will spend time with industry professionals exposing you to the many facets of Risk Management and potential career paths.

The program involves a combination of formal training, on-the-job learning and rotational assignments designed to prepare you for a career in Risk Management. Upon completion of the program, you will assume a progressive role within Risk Management.
